Pittsburgh, PA—November 16, 2026—Hawk Hill Pictures today announced a new partnership with Wonder Local to bring Conceivable [HERE], a faith-based drama inspired by the true story of writer, director, and producer Beth Caulfield, to audiences through community-hosted screenings nationwide.

Beginning Nov. 11, Wonder Local offers churches, organizations, and individuals the option to arrange local screenings of the film, creating opportunities for audiences to experience the story together and engage in meaningful conversations about faith, family, and unexpected life changes.

The film follows a 45-year-old wife, mother of two nearly grown children, and respected minister whose settled life is upended when she discovers she is pregnant, forcing her to confront her plans, convictions, and faith.

Key Highlights:

- Conceivable follows a respected ministry leader whose carefully planned future takes a twist with an unexpected pregnancy at 45.
- The film stars Jana Lee Hamblin (The West Wing), Eddie McClintock (Stark Raving Mad), Dean Cain (Lois & Clark: The New Adventures of Superman), and Daniel Roebuck (Final Destination).
- Beth Caulfield and Hamblin direct the film, and Caulfield wrote and produced it.

- Built on 20 years of bringing people together, Wonder Local is part of the Heritage Films family. Since 2004, Heritage Films has partnered with churches and faith communities around the world, using the power of film to inspire, encourage and bring people together.
- The film is a finalist for the 2026 ICVM's Crown Awards for Best Picture, Theatrical Limited Release. It was an Official Selection of the 2024 Fort Lauderdale International Film Festival, a 2025 semifinalist at the Tokyo Women Film Festival, and the recipient of the 2023 OASIS Award for Best Screenplay.

Life rarely goes according to plan.

For Brielle Burns, a respected ministry leader, wife, and mother of nearly grown kids, the future seemed clear. Her vocational calling was promising. The next chapter of life was beginning.

Then came the test result she never expected. Pregnant. At 45.

Suddenly, Brielle finds herself navigating a storm of opinions, fears, and deeply personal questions. Friends weigh in. Family reacts. The church watches. And Brielle must wrestle with what faith, responsibility, and courage really mean when life takes a turn she never saw coming.

"Conceivable grew out of one of the most personal and challenging experiences of my life," said Caulfield. "I didn't want to make a film that tells audiences what to think. I wanted to invite them into an honest, human story that tested my faith, and I hope inspires theirs. At its heart, I wanted to spark real conversations that honor unseen experiences and help change lives."

"We are excited to partner with Wonder Local Media to bring Conceivable to streaming audiences beginning November 11," said Jen Katzfey, President of Hawk Hill Pictures. "This partnership gives the film an opportunity to reach more viewers through a platform that understands the faith and family audience. Conceivable tells a deeply personal yet relatable story, and we are pleased to expand its reach and introduce it to new audiences."

"The most powerful stories don't just entertain us," said Heritage Films and Wonder Local CEO, Rod Hopping. "They help us see ourselves, understand one another, and find the courage to have conversations that matter. Conceivable is one of those stories. At Wonder Local, we believe films like this are meant to be experienced together, where a shared story can become the beginning of a meaningful conversation. We're delighted to partner with director Beth Caulfield and the Hawk Hill Pictures team to bring Conceivable into communities across America."
